This can be found in the Excel Functions area of the Excel menu. The Insert and Edit functions are available in either of these two areas: Insert Function Edit Function What is the purpose of the Insert and Edit functions? The Excel 2007 Insert and Edit functions provide a convenient way to insert, format, modify and append text to cells. Insert Insert inserts a new cell with the given text and/or data into the current active cell or range. Edit Edit replaces the current value of the selected cell with the given text and/or data. Append Append inserts a new cell below the last cell in the active row or below the active cell. Prepend Prepend inserts a new cell above the first cell in the active row or above the active cell. Paste Values Paste Values copies the value of the given cell or range into the clipboard. Paste Text Paste Text copies the value of the given cell or range into the clipboard. Paste Values without Formatting Paste Values without Formatting copies the value of the given cell or range into the clipboard. The value remains with the same formatting as if it had originally been typed. Paste Text without Formatting Paste Text without Formatting copies the value of the given cell or range into the clipboard. The value remains with the same formatting as if it had originally been typed. What is the range selection method? With the Insert/Edit functions, you must select a cell. If you are going to be replacing the value in the selected cell, the cell must be in the active cell or range. Selecting the cell If you are using the Replace function, you must select the cell to be replaced. Selecting a range If you are using the Insert function, you must select the range to be inserted. What options are available? Text Text is the most basic Insert/Edit function. It is available in the Insert function. The
