What's New in the?

Precision Gaze Mouse is an open-source software for the Unity 3D game engine, designed to work with eye and head tracking devices. The application offers three main features: move the mouse cursor, select menu options, and zoom the screen. The application can use input from any of the devices it's paired with, but it makes no attempt to pair them automatically. For input from head tracking devices, you need to specify the accuracy to be used. The application also displays a warp bar that shows the distance of the cursor from the center of the screen. You can specify the maximum size of the warp bar and the distance from which the mouse will be moved. The program is simple to use and makes only basic changes to the mouse cursor, which means the application works just as well on touch-based screens. A new window is created with the default settings when you launch the program, but you can always modify these settings if desired. You can use up to 4 devices, but the application can only pair two of them. You can get complete source code for the application here: The software is currently in the early stages of development and you should expect a number of bugs and stability problems during the next few months.
