Figure 9-8 displays some of the primary tools and menu items found in Photoshop. Illustrations by Neil Swaab Figure 9-8: There are many tools and menu items available in Photoshop. Photoshop has a vector tool that lets you create simple geometric shapes that are not dependent on pixels. Adobe created a special line tool that creates multi-stroke shapes in a single stroke. This tool is a permanent part of the program and is a very popular tool. In the next few chapters, I show you how to create several image editing projects with the tools available in Photoshop. Starting Photoshop Photoshop is not as difficult to learn as you might think. The first few steps are slightly different from using other graphics programs (such as a word processing program or a drawing program), but it's easy to adjust once you've begun. The most important concepts to understand are those related to layers, and the layers are organized in a matrix similar to a table that lets you manipulate the layers — create, delete, move, and rotate them. The following sections explain how to access some of Photoshop's many menus and tools. I show you how to work with layers to manipulate them. I also show you how to create new documents using Photoshop's File menu. As with any other program, you get more out of the program if you have a computer with at least a 2 GHz processor. (You can upgrade your computer's performance later by installing faster video and sound cards and more memory.) Also, you should use a program with a large hard drive (see Chapter 5 for more on hard drives) to hold your images. Starting Photoshop from the Application menu You must begin a new document to start working in Photoshop. To create a new document in Photoshop, choose File⇒New or press Ctrl+N (Win) or +N (Mac). When the New Document window appears, navigate to the folder where you want to create the file and type the name of the new file, like so: `File⇒New` `File⇒New` `File⇒New` `File⇒New` Then click the OK button. The new document opens, looking just like Figure 9-9. It's a 16-bit RLE-compressed TIFF file. When you click the Open button, Photoshop saves the file in your default program and

The purpose of this project is to refine the multidimensional model of hypothetical self-regulation mechanisms that mediate the relation between attachment-related infant behavior and present-day psychopathology. These mechanisms will be tested as mediators of the relation between attachment and: (a) attachment anxiety, (b) attachment disorganization, (c) childhood temperament, (d) adult externalizing, and (e) adult positive affective characteristics. The sample of 100 subjects with a history of childhood attachment trauma who have been followed longitudinally over the past decade will be assessed once again, and will include measures of attachment, early stress experiences and self-report measures of internalizing and externalizing characteristics. Partial support for the first aim of the project was found: evidence of a long-lasting association between attachment anxiety in childhood and attachment anxiety in adulthood. Support for the second aim has been found: the mechanisms linked to attachment disorganization in childhood and to externalizing characteristics in adulthood. There was also limited evidence for the third aim, that childhood temperament mediated the relation between attachment disorganization in childhood and externalizing characteristics in adulthood. The fourth aim will be tested in a separate, larger sample; that is, whether or not early self-care strategies mediate the relation between attachment disorganization in childhood and externalizing characteristics in adulthood.], [@B12]). Therefore, we did not find any associations between high oral hygiene self-efficacy and oral health-related behaviors or oral health status. Interestingly, this survey did not find an association between self-efficacy and oral health status. While we expected that individuals with good oral hygiene practices would have higher levels of self-efficacy, the self-efficacy of subjects with low oral hygiene practices was similar to that of the subjects with a good oral hygiene practice. This means that the strong beliefs of those with high oral hygiene self-efficacy did not play any role in their oral hygiene practices. This discrepancy may have been caused by the nature of our study, which focused on the specific oral hygiene practices. We expected that the subjects with higher self-efficacy may well have had different oral hygiene practices from the subjects with low self-efficacy. This study has several limitations. First, the cross-sectional design of the present study limited the causal inferences that could be made. A prospective study that assesses oral hygiene self-efficacy and oral health status would be needed to clarify the temporal causal relationship between oral hygiene self-efficacy and oral health
