Its called "mushroom effect" It appears when you use the DWG Importer for Illustrator. The steps for getting the raw XML and then processing with Notepad++ is not the easiest way, so for that reason I am making this simple guide to show how to: Extract the XML from an image using an Automator workflow action Resolve style and other image properties using Notepad++ (BeautifulSoup is the easiest) First step In the Automator application, select "Application" In the left sidebar, click on "File" and select "New Document" Select "Automator" from the "Application" dropdown menu and press the "Create" button Click the + button and add "Get Selected Files" to the workflow action Save it as "MushroomExtractor.aaai" Second step In the "New Document" dialog box, click on "Choose", then select the "MushroomExtractor.aaai" (Which you created in the first step), and then press the "Open" button Then, in the left sidebar, click on "Document" and select "Open" Select the "MushroomExtractor.aaai" and then press the "Open" button Now, in the left sidebar, click on "Edit" In the following dialog box, click on the cog-wheel icon (top-right) to select "Find" Enter "image/png" in the "Find what:" textbox and "jpg" in the "Search in:" textbox Then, in the left sidebar, click on "Find" In the "Find what:" textbox, select the "MushroomExtractor.aaai" In the "Search in:" textbox, type "Fig" (without the quotes) Then, in the left sidebar, click on "Find All" Click the "Close" button Then, in the left sidebar, click on "Document" and select "Save As" Name it "ResolveFigProperties.aaai" Then, in the "ResolveFigProperties.aaai" (Which you just created), click on "Save as Template" Then, in the left sidebar, click on "Document" and select "Save" Name it "MMPProperties.xml"
