HyperMotion was launched at the FIFA 20 Fan Festival in Paris, which took place from October 18th to 19th. Now in full production and integration with the game, we have a greater insight into what exactly this technology can do. Lets look at some of the things that FIFA 22 can do with the HyperMotion technology, which will alter how you play FIFA.

FIRST TOUCH SUPPORT

Of course, with the player movements coming from the motion capture suits, we can see when a player takes the ball and how the player can control the ball. The first thing to see are the visual changes to the dribble system and first touch. Things you can already see are when you press a button to go for a pass, it will still be slow. You will not immediately be able to make runs or perform off the ball moves. When you make a pass, you can immediately be able to see the player move and the correct action taken for your pass. You can also see that the ball moves along with the player, as you are pressing the ball at the correct time. This is a big change for first touch.

Now you can be more accurate and controlled when passing, moving, and receiving. You can be more precise when receiving a pass, and when receiving a pass you can be able to see where the passing lane is, and when receiving the ball, you can see when the correct passing lane is present. You can be more effective at being a target for the opposition when a pass is happening, as you can see exactly when to be receiving the pass, and you can see exactly when the pass is on your stick, rather than you not being able to see the pass coming towards you, or the ball being in the air when you are receiving. Another thing we can see is that you can see where players are going when a pass is made, and this means that you can be more confident in whether or not the pass is going to be in a good spot for you to score. SECOND TOUCH SUPPORT So, passing. When you are making a pass, you can see when the pass is made, and you can see when the pass is on your stick. You can see
