The need for adventure and an epic quest for a 2-10 year old girl and her Father, be sure to bring your Kid along.Q: What does "used to" mean here? In this piece, "Nothing will ever take the responsibility. [...] And no one will ever take the blame" (bold by me), does the bold phrase use the phrase "used to" by means of its present perfect progressive structure (i.e. it is a sentence in the present tense that refers to an action which took place in the past)? One thing is certain. Nothing will ever take the responsibility. [...] And no one will ever take the blame. A: "Used to" is a perfect construction meaning "used to be" and is related to "was before." If something used to happen (or used to be something) then it is something that used to happen or happened. For example, "I used to enjoy that game" means that you enjoyed it at one time but no longer do. If something is used to, it uses to been something in the past but not anymore. Consider this. I said, "I wish I could go to the beach tonight, but it's too cold." Here we are indicating that we wished to do something at one point in time but that now we no longer do. I used to enjoy my grandfather's poker parties. Here we are indicating that we did something that is characteristic of and closely associated with past enjoyable activity. So in your case you could say "I used to enjoy making fun of who exactly was taking the blame." Meaning that at one time, before I made a statement about who was actually responsible for something, I used to enjoy making fun of
