What's new in Singled Out:

Cyber Runner is a tabletop role-playing game by Yellow Dog Press set on the fictional StarMaven planet of Acheron. The game is set in the distant future (supposedly 3,000 years in the future) and gives players characters with skills in space piracy, inter-planetary spying and starship command. Setting The people of StarMaven (or Thran Maven, as they call themselves) are a peaceful race that are genetically bred and enhanced to live off-world. In an effort to preserve their beliefs, StarMaven has declared itself a neutral zone that does not interfere in the affairs of other worlds except when they feel the need to defend themselves. They do not actively seek warlike encounters, and when engaging with other races ask for their aid and permission to help, if they feel they need it (though never forced to fight). Their planet was once a world sacred to another entire race, the Hulugana. Out of fear and conflict, the Hulugana separated the StarMaven people from their source of faith and power, and have sworn vengeance on the faith, to the point of staging a Diaspora across the galaxy so they would not be found. The Hulugana have also sworn to return and punish StarMaven. StarMaven, for its part, have never forgotten what it means to be human; although they derive many of their values, their selfinterest, from the old Hulugana culture, they have never forgotten their religious values of peace. Setting content has been described as a cross between Firefly (Serenity) and Star Trek: The Original Series, with elements from Zork and the Holmes stories. The most violent element in the game's system is cybernetic implants. Prosthetic enhancements, the implants are synonymous with Star Maven. There are implants that can apply pain, enhance sensory perception, increase strength or agility, allow the owner to recall the thoughts of a other, launch weapons, block incoming enemy fire, induce calm, or vary one's speed for added manoeuvrability. While there is more to cyberware than simply acquiring it, such implants are the most common means of cyberware amongst the Star

Maven. Structure Cyber Runner is a system played out over a single life with multiple crises and danger facing the protagonist. On the character creation screen, players pick three Character Backgrounds to place into their Fama (the character description box used to
