Teacher Notes This is a great way to introduce vocabulary words, for both students and teachers. There is a link between the text and the vocabulary list and anything that you say to explain a word or question if the student asks, will have a link to the vocabulary. All of the words are linked to the texts they appear in.Pro-papillary pneumocytes in lungs with adenocarcinoma. The pathological diagnosis of adenocarcinoma of lung is usually based on a combination of cytological aspects of the specimen. Our earlier study showed that the lung tissue surrounding lung adenocarcinoma is characterized by peculiar cytological aspects, exhibiting 'pro-papillary' features. In order to evaluate the possible mechanisms of this morphological structure, we studied lung specimens from eight lung adenocarcinomas in two different stages: seven peripheral and one central lesions. We showed, by different approaches, that both the alveolar sacs, display pro-papillary cytology. Thus, we interpret these features as an expression of the primitive morphological characteristics of the cells that arise from the bronchiolar epithelia". Our findings tend to confirm the hypothesis that these cells may be responsible for the outgrowth of aden
