elements of workshop technology by hajra choudhary vol 1 pdf 283 Why Google Is Clueless About Local Commerce - sctb ===== patio11 _Google and Microsoft are hamstrung by the fact that they can't employ localized search engine algorithms themselves. They are not allowed to collect data on the performance of the search results themselves. All they can do is suggest to companies that they should add geographic information to the content of their websites, or publish their results as open data. But, as I've written elsewhere, this puts the cart before the horse. Google is not a local search engine, not because they "can't employ localized search engine algorithms", but because there is currently a demand for one. _ Since they actually do employ localization algorithms, this argument is, I believe, actively trying to deceive. ~~~ darklajid What's wrong with hamstrung? Whether it is moral and legal, sure, it would be interesting to hear about that but I guess most people would agree that it's mostly market driven. Asking for fair pricing for services is simply what you do in a market. Google blocks the same in a price sensitive market that (most of the people) here are. Yes, this is an upfront with Google and the search engine should have listed the prices - Google will mark the search result with the price and don't show the same result for cash transactions. But market driven? ----- marze Comcast (my cable company) has been showing local listings on the Cable News Channel for at least a year now. I prefer that to Google, as they don't send a page to download my credit card info. ----- aik Just like the next mistake startups make. Adam Schefter reports the 49ers will visit with second-round pick Brandon Chubb and pass on UCF tight end David Njoku for PFF's Michael Mauti. (0:51) The San Francisco 49ers have added another All-American offensive lineman to their rookie minicamp. The team signed Oklahoma center Mason Cole in a tryout Friday, according to a source.
