I have an object that has a property called "status", which is an object containing one element of the key. Example: var msg = { "status": { "id": "asdf" } } I want to get the value of the id field in "status" out to be in to a single "variable" that I can concatenate with other strings. Can I do this in Javascript? Example: var test = "hello " + msg.status.id + " you"; So basically I want to get the value of "id" out of "status" into a variable. I would also like to do it without having to reference the variable "status" Thanks! A: You need to use bracket notation: var test = "hello " + msg["status"]["id"] + " you"; Bracket notation allows you to perform associative lookups. Lookup with dot notation is being converted to bracket notation. Additionally, it's worth noting that, if you want to use bracket notation, you need to escape the braces in your string. Otherwise you'd get the string Hello {"status"
