My code (ArrayList.java):

public class ArrayList extends AbstractList implements List { private static class Iterator implements Iterator { private E data; public boolean hasNext() { return data!= null; } public E next() { if (!hasNext()) throw new NoSuchElementException(); E e = data; data = null; return e; } public void remove() { throw new UnsupportedOperationException(); } } public Iterator iterator() { return new Iterator(); } }

The problem is, that the line "data = null;" gets omitted and the compiler gives me an error: E must be a compile-time constant I also tried it with a class containing only the "data = null" line, but that also gives me the same error. Any ideas, what I am missing? A: Iterator.remove() throws an UnsupportedOperationException exception. See javadoc That's why your app is not working. Cannot remove the last element because there is no previous element; hasPrevious() would have returned false. Instead of it, try to use List#remove(), take a look at ArrayList#remove(Object). Q: Why do some very old-looking random patterns appear in my images? Why do some very old-looking random patterns appear in my images? I'm using PiPim to capture snapshots of an electronic device. A: The pins on the fixture are probably causing reflections. When you c6a93da74d
