Software-only changes are not all there are, though. The choices of colors remain “slightly” if not definitely incorrect. Sometimes UI changes have nothing to do with “color”, as they are purely decorative. Using the Collapse and Expand feature in the Library section of the program one receives the following view: However, all that’s been moved to the “Adobe Creative Cloud Libraries” folder under . Next, the Smart Objects feature is now available in Layers. To activate it, one needs to first select a layer that will be smart then drag a small circle with a + sign. This adds the smart layers options to the top of the layer panel. Once activated, a blue bar will appear on the top of all smart layers. It’s tinted blue; this is by design. Smart layers are meant to give users added functionality but they can be confusing to use. That said, some tasks like duplicating and conversion using the Smart Filters allow for this functionality without having to split a layer into two (a.k.a. smart object). Now, the Smart Objects function can be found in the Alt/Opt+ tab of the Layer panel. I guess there’s a workaround for Lightroom users, though. You can add a smart object directly from the “Edit menu”. However, the exact same functionality can be obtained by having a layer selected, then selecting > Edit and then Edit > Convert to Smart Object. Note that this will raise all visible layers into a single layer. The Alt/Opt+ tab in the Layer panel gives one the option of disabling the Smart Objects function. Additionally, a > Edit > Set Merged Layers can be used for the same purpose, as well as a > Merge Layers. This functionality can be accessed by selecting a Smart Object in the Layers panel and pressing Alt/Opt+T.
